

From: Khaet Grindell, Public Policy Polling

To: Interested Parties

Subject: Grijalva Leads in New Primary Poll for Arizona's 7th Congressional District

Date: April 11, 2025

A new poll in Arizona's 7th Congressional district Democrat primary finds that Adelita Grijalva emerges as a clear frontrunner:

- In the initial 3-way matchup between candidates, Grijalva leads at 49% of the vote compared to 11% for Daniel Hernandez and 5% for Deja Foxx. After voters learn more about the background of each candidate, Grijalva's lead in the matchup jumps 5 points to 54%. This suggests an ability to grow support even as voters learn more about Grijalva's opponents. Additionally, a majority (55%) say they are more likely to vote for Grijalva after hearing about her background, which helps increase her lead in the informed vote.
- 67% of primary voters overall (including 78% of Hispanic voters in particular) have a favorable opinion of Grijalva compared to just 6% with an unfavorable one. Daniel Hernandez also has a net positive rating at 41% favorable/13% unfavorable. Deja Foxx is largely unknown with just 13% viewing her favorably, 10% unfavorably and 77% "not sure."
- 85% of respondents said that it was either very (63%) or somewhat (22%) important to elect someone who is committed to carrying on Congressman Raúl Grijalva's legacy.

Public Policy Polling surveyed: 527 likely Democratic primary voters from April 7-8, 2025. The margin of error is +/- 4.3%. 75% of the interviews for the survey were conducted by text message and 25% by telephone.

